NEW HOTEL PROJECT

The articles and advertisements on the subject of a new hotel are merrily indicating that the people of Mt. Sterling are ready to put their money into this long-wished for enterprise.

We have long talked for this very hotel project and now we want to congratulate and commend the Chamber of Commerce for formulating plans by which all of our people can have a part in giving to Mt. Sterling the much-needed and long-desired hotel accommodations for not only our people, but all who may come this way.

Good roads are being constructed, the way of the Midland Trail has been blazed, Eastern Kentucky is preparing to unlap her wealth in this, the Gate City to our coal, oil and timber resources, and with the hotel contemplated and now on the way we will be ready to extend the glad hand to all comers.

Aside from giving increased values to our real estate, country and city alike, its consumptions will add increased deposits in our banks through our merchants, and in addition will give a local market for all of our poultry and garden produce.

As we said in the beginning, our people are eager for the start and we shall expect the stock sales to be closed long before every one will have a chance to take part in the new hotel.

Be ready to speak and claim a part in the new hotel stock when the word "go" is announced.

A DYING LEGISLATURE

Eight more days and the 1922 Kentucky Legislature will have closed its mission.

Barring the marketing act, the people of this proud commonwealth will have nothing to be thankful for.

It has been one continuous contest of party supremacy regardless of state benefits.

We had thought that representatives in both houses were able to realize their missions as state representatives.

The tax question, educational demands, eleemosynary institution needs, the road questions, prohibition question, amendment to statutory laws, elimination of useless offices were among the questions to be dealt with by lawmakers whose duty it is to place this commonwealth on a plane from which results, just to all of our citizenship, may be attained, but a partisan spirit prevailed, and the representatives, barring a few, among whom is our representative, had seemingly neither time nor inclination to consider the people's interests.

There will be but one regret and that is the enormous price paid for the little accomplished.

WHAT NEXT?

Within about four months the Mt. Sterling Fair will be on, and from what we gather this is to be the best fair Mt. Sterling has ever had. The floral hall is to be a more attractive feature, the stock of all kinds will take on the real competitive nature, the trots and racing will have such purses that the fastest of the state's horses will be here and that all entries will be made up with horses with fast records. Secretary Wilkerson advises us that he will have the most attractive midway and that this fair will maintain her reputation for order and that all people will be advised in advance of what they may expect. The effort will be to make this the most attractive of all our fairs.

Treasury Department, Office of the Comptroller of the Currency, Washington, February 28, 1922.

Whereas, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that the Montgomery National Bank of Mt. Sterling, in the city of Mt. Sterling, in the county of Montgomery, and state of Kentucky, has complied with all the provisions of the Act of Congress "to enable National Banking Associations to extend their corporate existence and for other purposes," approved July 12, 1882;

Now, therefore, I, D. R. Crissinger, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that the Montgomery National Bank of Mt. Sterling, in the city of Mt. Sterling, in the county of Montgomery, and state of Kentucky, is authorized to have succession for the period specified in its amended articles of association: namely, until close of business on February 28, 1942.

In testimony whereof, witness my hand and seal of office, this twenty-eighth day of February, 1922.

(Seal).

TO ERADICATE WILD ONIONS

J. T. Coons, one of Montgomery county's most progressive farmers, has been seeking a way to rid his land of wild onions and wrote to the College of Agriculture at the University of Kentucky for information on the subject. The following letter, which will be of interest to farmers, was received by Mr. Coons: Lexington, Ky., March 1, 1922.

Mr. J. T. Coons, Mt. Sterling, Ky.
 Dear Sir: I have your letter of February 27. Perhaps an oil spray would be the most practical method of handling the onions in these small patches. I do not know whether the oil from the automobile would be effective or not, but imagine that it would. The Indiana station has carried on experiments with the use of oil for the eradication of wild onions and have had very successful results. They recommend the use of orchard-heating oil, which I presume is crude oil with most of the gasoline and more volatile parts removed. At the same time this is perhaps more volatile than your automobile oil. I suppose you intend to use the waste oil after it has lost its value for lubricating purposes. Gasoline is too volatile and will not kill the onions; neither would coal oil. They will kill the tops, but will not penetrate into the ground. You must have something heavier, is well to ponder over in these sub-normal times. Trading with a store that carries only the best clothes for men and younger men eradicates the possibility of flattering camouflage patterns and prices that lead to undoing of what in a good store would be sound judgment.

and I should think the automobile oil would perhaps be quite satisfactory. There is no necessity in cutting the tops off. Let them get a good start and then sprinkle oil on liberally. This will kill everything, but will not injure the soil for raising future crops.

Wild onions can be eradicated by consistent cutting off, although it may take two or three seasons. Keep them cut off all summer so that they will not get a chance to breathe. You are certain to destroy them in a short time if you do this.

Yours very truly,
 E. J. KINNEY,
